作品集：

The portfolio helps the reviewers determine your potential to perform successfully in a studio-based design curriculum.

In order to review each application fairly and accurately, the reviewing committee requires evidence in one or more categories:

The level of creative skill you possess in any medium.

The extent of your interest in the proposed degree program, made evident through your abilities in composition, physical form-making, or perception of the environment.

Your ability to translate ideas into physical form, even if in simple terms such as drawing.

FORMAT

- Portfolios should be designed and formatted for on-screen viewing. Maximum file size is 25 MB.

ATtribution

- For each project, list the applicant's name, the project's date, and an indication as to whether the project was academic, office-related, or personal. In the case of collaborative or professional work, the contribution by the applicant must be precisely described.

ORGANIZATION

- The organization of the portfolio is a design exercise. It should be clear, succinct, and thoughtfully composed to best reflect your interests and skills. The quality of the work is of greater importance than quantity.

CONTENT

美国景观设计（硕士）院校信息-2020 版本

- Please note: Photographs of landscapes (including travel photographs) as examples of creative work are not acceptable except from studio arts applicants with a major in photography.
- Provide work that demonstrates the ability to take an idea and adeptly convey it visually. Include a wide range of drawings, such as landscapes, human figures, and perspectives. Hand drawings, particularly gestural drawings, are strongly encouraged.
- Photographic or photo static reproductions must show work in the visual arts or design that has been executed by the applicant. The work should include examples of freehand drawings, and three-dimensional work executed by the applicant. The committee places emphasis on drawing skills. Those applying for advanced placement or for a second professional degree are expected to submit examples of work demonstrating their ability to pursue study at an advanced level
- Applicants without backgrounds in landscape architecture are not expected to show landscape architectural skills but rather creative, artistic or perceptive skills through drawing, painting, or three-dimensional explorations (models). A portfolio helps the reviewers associate your desire to enter graduate landscape architecture school with your potential to perform successfully in a studio-based design curriculum.
- Applicants with backgrounds in landscape architecture, architecture, or environmental design are expected to present a high-quality portfolio showing well-developed graphic skills and a well-developed sense of design, space, form, and volume. Photographs of models help and should be used when possible. Show at least three steps of design development in a specific project and your progression/thought process. The committee assumes your portfolio and its format represent your best abilities in design.

Applicants submit a portfolio as an uploaded attachment to the online application. There is no prescribed set of requirements for the portfolio except for restrictions on size: a digital file may not exceed 30MB. It is advised to limit the length of the portfolio to 12-24 pages (quality is better than quantity). Below are suggestions for the portfolio:

- a) In the case of applicants with prior design experience, the Admissions Committee evaluates portfolios for evidence of conceptual reasoning, design ability, and graphic skills. Examples of work may include, but not be limited to, design documents, sketches, models, digital and hand renderings, free-hand drawing, graphic design, photographs of sculptures, and samples of writing. All work should be personal. In the case of group projects or projects carried out in an office, please clearly indicate your role in the process.
- b) In the case of applicants without prior design experience, the admissions committee evaluates portfolios for evidence of the candidate's potential to perform in a design program and his/her interest in the discipline. Applicants can express why they want to study landscape architecture graphically, visually, and in writing. This documentation can be recording past experiences (personal, related to school, work, or travel) through photographs, drawings and sketches, and essays. All work should be personal and original.

- Variety: An effective portfolio demonstrates a variety of interests, abilities and skills. A portfolio that is well rounded, with a diversity of media and project types is stronger than one which is dominated by just one type of work. Try to achieve a balance.
- Quantity: We will review ten to twelve works. Fewer examples of work will not provide an accurate view of your experience and skills. However, do not "pad" the portfolio with more than twelve items, we will not review additional works. Select only your best examples of creative expression.
- An Interest in Landscape Architecture: Your work should demonstrate an interest in the natural and built environment. An entire portfolio of skillful portraits does not necessarily reflect your interests and desire to study landscape architecture.
- Organization and Order: Make sure the portfolio possesses a clear organization in which projects are thoughtfully grouped and arranged thematically. Give special attention to the sequence of the work.
- Clarity, Neatness and Effective Presentation: Your potential as a landscape architecture student will be shown through the care with which the portfolio is assembled and presented. Attention should be paid to the design and composition of the portfolio itself.
- Good Photographs and Reproductions: Quality work is often handicapped by poor reproductions, which make the projects difficult to see, appreciate and evaluate. Insure that your work is clearly and accurately represented. Try not to compromise your efforts with poor lighting, fuzzy focus or extraneous images in the background.
